FORESTRY IN TASMANIA

The Draft Environmental Impact Statement underlines the importance of the forest-based industries, directly and indirectly, for the Tasmanian economy.

We Tasmanians having long been aware of the value of our fine hardwood forests as an industrial resource, and given the present economic climate, the importance of encouraging the development of our local industries.

An important consideration then, is the regeneration and reforestation policies that will ensure that our forest-based industries will continue to represent a significant sector of our economy in the future.

The Report endorses the practice of clear-felling and the presence of the woodchip companies in the Tasmanian forests. However, it acknowledges the need to establish strict guidelines to govern future logging operations in order to ensure the preservation of top soil and the areas of water catchment and the protection of flora and fauna.

It is recognised that logging operations must be co-ordinated with due concern as to their likely environmental management for the government agencies is the absence of either stringent controls or a system of incentives concerning land use after the harvest of private forests.

The Forestry Commission recently expressed its concern that over a fifth of private forests logged in Tasmania were not being regenerated or converted to pasture and thus were contributing to the problem of soil erosion in Tasmania.

The opposing reactions of the woodchip industry and the conservation groups to the Draft of the Environmental Impact Statement reflect the pressing need for a balance to be established between the demands of environmental control and economic viability. The Legislative Council Inquiry last year into forest management advocated a revamping of the of tighter environmental controls by the Government.

This report also highlighted the widespread concern of many Tasmanians that we may be selling our valuable resources too cheaply.

Could more jobs be generated in Tasmania by allowing for increased processing within the State? Are the fine furniture and fuelwood industries being accorded the levels of encouragement they deserve?

The reassessment of the role of our forest industries will need to take place on several fronts. The conservation lobby groups recognise the importance of woodchip and forest based industries to the Tasmanian economy. These groups represent the growing awareness of Tasmanians as to the recreational value of our forests and also our awareness of the importance of environmental preservation to ensure that future Tasmanians enjoy a high quality of life.

We are faced with a watershed concerning the forest based industries in Tasmania; in the immediate months ahead important decisions must be made regarding harvesting levels, conservation measures, the maintenance and the expansion of employment opportunities within the industry, in order that both the harvesting and regeneration of Tasmanian forests will continue to accrue greater environmental and economical benefits for all Tasmanians.

New legislation such as the proposed Forest Practices Bills will not only reassure the community but will ensure that excesses of irresponsible forest operators be curbed.

Beneficial management on this scale demands the close co-operation of the State and Federal Governments, the conservation groups, the forest-based industries and the public to ensure that the harvesting of our forest resources is attuned to the economic, environmental and social needs of the future.

FORESTRY IN TASMANIA. Cont. from P.1.

This first draft of the Environmental Impact Study was compiled by the Forestry Commission and the three major woodchip companies operating in this State. It is however, available for public comment and submissions can be made to the Federal Minister for Arts, Heritage and Environment. It is imperative that the final decision concerning woodchipping is made by Tasmanians. We must ensure that we retain control of our environment now and in the future.

in which case a figure of or below 60 beats per minute is used at the second and subsequent stops. However, this variant only applies to rides of more than 80 Kilometres long.

If a course is less than 80 kilometres recovered heart rate must be 55 or below at all check points, irrespective of how many there are.

Signs of distress are another guide for an examining veterinarian, especially after the half hour recovery period.

Even though heart rate may be O.K. it is still possible for an animal to be close to exhaustion. An experienced equine veterinary surgeon knows what to look for in this regard and again his decision is absolute.

The worst possible thing that can befall a horse during an endurance ride is for it to drop dead.

It has happened, particularly in earlier times before expertise was acquired. Nowadays, fortunately, such a tragedy is rare, which is just as well because it puts a damper on the function and depresses everyone involved.

The key to successful endurance rides though is not the prowess of the supervising veterinarian, important and all as he may be. No, it is the preparation that goes beforehand, of and by both horse and rider - weeks, days and hours of preparation.

Yes, endurance riding is a dedicated sport and one which must never be tackled lightly.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

ENDURANCE RIDING.

By Tim McManus,
Veterinary Officer,
Dept. of Agriculture.

Dear Sir,

In my capacity as Secretary to Meals on Wheels Association of Tasmania, Fingal Valley Group, I would like to bring to the public notice the activities of the Meals Group. We are part of the Tasmanian Meals on Wheels Association, which is an incorporated body in receipt of a Commonwealth Subsidy for each meal delivered.

This branch is autonomous however, and conducts its own affairs paying one cent per meal to the parent body, but receives the Commonwealth subsidy itself. The group pays the St. Marys Hospital for preparation of the meals, supplies all the utensils - disposable and otherwise, purchases the fruit delivered with the meals, arranges drivers roster and provides a petrol allowance.

The committee comprises people from all walks of life who, at the moment, are under the Chairmanship of Mr Bob Yates of Fingal. St. Marys Committee members are Mesdames Doris Bullock, Margaret Bullock, Heather Lodge, Pauline Berwick, Sister Pat Burgess, Matron M. Lavelle. Fingal members are Mrs Ruth Saunders, Messrs Rupert McGee, Sutton Lowe, Les Rubenach, and Jack Miller. Mrs Mary Targett and Karen Glatte arrange the drivers rosters for St. Marys, while Les Rubenach and Jack Miller do them for Fingal.

Now the Annual Meeting of the Group is being held in May and the Committee is anxious for a renewed public interest this year, because the drivers numbers are declining and there is a tendency of some drivers to be called on more often than they should to drive. A renewed public interest is therefore called for in this very worthwhile community service, and we hope the public will get behind the Meals on Wheels Committee, support it willingly and unselfishly as has been in the past by so many dedicated drivers.

May I finish by including an excerpt from a letter received recently from a recipient of meals. She says ".....It is a pleasure to meet the various drivers who come for they all have a smile and a cheerful greeting irrespective of the weather. The Committee and the drivers are giving our District a wonderful service, and I do appreciate the share of it that I receive..."

Yours faithfully,

J.S. Miller.

Hon. Sec.

From time to time media publicity is given to endurance rides in Tasmania and elsewhere. Often reports on such events mention that a particular horse was "vetted out" before, during or after the ride.

What does this mean, and how does a supervising veterinarian decide that a competing animal must be withdrawn?

As might be expected, surveillance commences with a pre-ride check. If possible this should be done the day before the event.

It involves a thorough inspection of the horse, first unsaddled and at rest, and then at a trot and canter to observe if any signs of lameness exist.

While at rest the animal's pulse, temperature and respiration rate are recorded to ensure it is fit to start, and also as a check against elevations later on. Age is also assessed because only horses more than 5 years old are permitted to compete.

Any indication of girth or saddle galls is noted. These can flare up during a ride in much the same way as blisters do on the heels of human long-distance runners. And of course the horse's feet and shoes are given close attention, for obvious reasons.

Assuming everything is satisfactory - and it usually is because owners know well enough the futility of attempting endurance events with unsound mounts - The next inspection will be at a check point during the ride.

Here procedures are followed that are designed to establish which horses are fit to proceed and which, due to impending exhaustion or lameness, must be "vetted out".

In this latter event the supervising veterinarian's decision is final. Any disregard by a rider of a disqualification order in an endurance ride will be countered by police intervention.

Experienced riders know this of course and although veterinary checks present anxious moments, competitors usually accept the outcome graciously. Where there is no lameness or other apparent external injury, heart rate is used as the main criterion for assessing fitness to proceed. If a horse's heart rate is still above 55 beats per minute, 30 minutes after arrival at a check point, then it must be disqualified.

The only variation to this is where there is more than one check point along the course.

DIET, OBESITY, EXERCISE AND YOUR CHILD:

Heart diseases are on the increase among the 25 to 40 year age group. It is a well-known fact that diet and exercise play a large role in whether or not a person develops this type of illness.

There is a reason why this trend has developed. It is an increase in consumption of junk food amongst teenagers, which in turn develops obesity and lazy exercise habits. The development of heart disease and associated ailments begins at the age these dietary and exercise habits develop.

Are your children eating the wrong foods when they are obviously overweight?

PARTICIPATION AND EQUITY PROGRAMME:

Mrs. Jenny Thorp has been appointed co-ordinator of a P.E.P. curriculum review during the next six months.

One of the objects of the evaluation is to determine student needs for further education in the community.

Mrs. Thorp will have discussions with students, staff, parents and the community before preparing recommendations for the school and the Education Department to consider.

TASMANIAN ARTS COUNCIL:

Each year, the Tasmanian Arts Council organises visits by performers in the areas of music, dance, literature and drama.

On Wednesday, 24th April, the group "Shenanigans" will visit the school to perform a concert in music and dance of various cultures.

"Shenanigans" is a well-known group and the performance should be well worthwhile.

The cost will be $1.20 for the eldest student of a family and 60 cents for each subsequent child.

Interested parents are welcome.

THE SCHOOLS BOARD OF TASMANIA:

The Schools Board is a statutory authority set up by the Government to decide what certificates should be issued and what they should say. It is authorised to:

write syllabuses;
supervise the assessment of students' work; and issue certificates.

The Government appoints the Board's twenty three members. They represent the Education Department, non-government schools, teachers' organisations, the University of Tasmania, the Council of Advanced Education, women's organisations, employer groups and parents. All Board members give their services free.

MAX BURR
Member For Lyons

PRESS RELEASE:

A major step forward involving the recovery of maintenance from spouses in overseas countries has been made by the federal government.

"Australia is now party to a UN Convention which will overcome serious legal and practical obstacles in recovering maintenance abroad," Mr Burr (MHR for Lyons), said. "This has always been a difficult area for families.

"However the administrative arrangements have been settled with State governments and the Federal Government has made the necessary regulations under the Family Law Act."

Mr Burr said that it was now possible for a person in a country covered by the Convention to prosecute a maintenance or variation claim against another person in another country which is also a party.

"This is achieved by the documents being sent by a transmitting agency to a receiving agency, which then takes all steps for the recovery of maintenance.

"The Federal Government is meeting the costs of administering the Convention so that services provided to the public will be free of charge.

"Tasmanians wishing to make a maintenance claim under the new provisions should contact the Australian Legal Aid offices.

"Forty three countries are now linked by the Convention and include the UK, Italy, Greece, the Netherlands and Yugoslavia."
