WHATEVER HAPPENED TO THE WICKED, WONDERFUL DINNER PARTY?

I have always vastly preferred being a guest at someone else's table to hostessing my own get-together, but as little as five years ago, you wouldn't have found me suffering a full-scale anxiety attack at the thought of having a few people over for a meal.

Back then, you see, we had rules. You simply stocked a traditional bar, served hors d'oeuvres, and moved right along to your specialty -beef Wellington perhaps, with all the trimmings - offered with an appropriate wine.

After that, a five-star dessert was in order, as massively fattening as you pleased (Pavlova? trifle?) plus coffee and chocolates. The men passed around cigars, the women lit cigarettes, and everyone sank back into over-stuffed lounges, replete. What a wonderful way to spend an evening.

You don't need me to tell you that this prescribed and pleasurable formula is hopelessly out-of-date these days. First off, you haven't any idea what people drink. At a recent gathering I held, the traditional bottles of spirits sat idle, while a cask of ordinary white wine was speedily emptied. The mineral water went fast too, but my standard liquor failed to satisfy the guests.

As for the hors d'oeuvres, a plate of virtuous crudités was the top favourite, but my rich, bite-size quiches, along with the meat balls in a sinfully sweet sauce, languished untouched.

By that time, I was understandably worried about how the fillet of beef (a budget-busting extravagance nowadays) and the Yorkshire pudding would be received. The answer-not very well. I should have made available a second choice of humdrum sandwiches.

Is the whole world vegetarian? To be fair, not quite. A good number are simply passionately concerned about cholesterol, or are unswervingly sticking to spartan weight-loss regimens. (One woman, in retrospect the most gracious of all, brought her own diet dinner in a paper bag.)

Nonetheless, beef and other lusciously illicit edibles are clearly an assault on the 80's person.

In any case, I braced myself and brought out cherries flambe and coffee. Only two of us succumbed: Me and my man. The rest apparently never eat ruinous sweets or partake of iniquitous caffeine.

I didn't bother to mention chocolates or cigars, and I sneaked into the bathroom for a cigarette after four of the guests announced near-terminal smoke allergies.

Listen, I'm not against good health habits. All I'm asking for is a little guidance. The old, comfortable, delicious, wantonly gluttonous days are obviously gone, and I am without a clue as to how to engineer a soiree.

I'm thinking of slipping a questionnaire to future guests. Are you a vegetarian? Do you only drink white wine? Maybe I will do that.

Right now, though, I've got to get ready for an evening at my friend Susan's - a lady who plays tennis in her lunch hour and eats enough to starve a sparrow. What will her menu be, I wonder. Brown rice and spinach casserole? Stone-ground whole wheat muffins? Come to think of it, maybe she should have had the courtesy to hand happily self-indulgent me, a questionnaire.

WHAT'S ON

Letter from Mr Max Burr, Member for Lyons, to:

Mr Bill Taylor,
Executive Officer,
CEP Secretariat,
3PO Box 9944,
HOBART...7001

Dear Mr Taylor,

Thank you for your recent advice concerning an application for federal funding by the Lions Club of St. Marys. Your Ref: TCEY 00098.

I support this application for $31,273.00 with which to employ six people for fourteen weeks. The restoration of the railway station at St. Marys is an important project in many ways.

Since the Australian National Railways Commission took over the Tasmanian Government Railways there has been scant interest shown in preserving the many buildings that were not only an integral part of the railways operations but also part of the State's colourful history.

Apart from local and state interest, railway buffs throughout the world visit countries to see the remnants of the steam age. Much film and video footage is used to record these historic buildings. The old signal box from the now defunct Devonport station commands a great deal of attention at its present site with the Don Railway Museum.

In 1983 I was advised that ANR planned to demolish the St. Marys Station, regardless of the fact that it carried a National Trust Classification. To save it from the fate of the Latrobe station, which was on the National Estate listing but was still destroyed by a Federal Government authority, I asked the Minister for Transport to halt the intended demolition of the St. Marys Station. Fortunately my request was accepted.

I am advised that the site is now to be restored to its original layout. The station is to be renovated and scaped for use by the local community and the tourist. Local community groups will be encouraged to utilise the building and the adjacent area will house historic mining machinery.

It is felt that this will be a good draw card for tourists as St. Marys is seen as the centre of Tasmania's coal mining industry. With the new coastal road link through Four Mile Creek causing a deviation of tourist traffic from St. Marys I believe the idea of a mining museum in the heart of the coal mining area will regain some of the traffic loss. It will also create a complex that could be detailed on tourist package brochures.

Max Burr.
Member for Lyons.

WOOL LABELLING

Woolblendmark: This symbol guarantees the wool content is dominant in the article and is new wool. The percentage of new wool and the other fibre must be clearly marked next to the trademark. All products with the Woolblendmark must comply with the Australian Wool Corporation standards.

Celsius 30: This refers to a Woolblendmark fabric developed for men's wear. It is a lightweight fabric designed to keep you cool and comfortable in summer, and is used in suits, blacks, and blazers.

Washable Celsius: This label appears on men's lightweight slacks made from a Woolblendmark fabric thoroughly tested for washing performance. The fabric can be machine washed without removing the original creases.

Superwash: This is a performance standard which gives the consumer a garment which resists shrinkage during machine washings, while still retaining natural wool properties. (Techniques such as filling in the gaps between the epidermis scales with resin, or stripping the scales back to make wool machine washable).

Flammability: This symbol is used on wool products such as children's dressing gowns and blankets. Legislation in most states controls the labelling and sale of children's night clothes in accordance with the fire hazard they represent, and since wool is the safest fibre, it carries labels stating "Wool, naturally flame resistant" and "Low fire danger as 1249".

Carpet Labelling: The Australian Wool Corporation has a grading scheme for carpets. It comprises the Woolmark, the statement "Pure New Wool" and specified the type of carpet (light duty, medium duty, heavy duty, or decorative).

Wools to Watch out for:Cashmere:

Each Cashmere goat, native to Turkestan and northern India, yields a tiny amount of soft, downy wool. Forty goats are needed for enough wool for a coat. The wool is patiently combed from the animal and varies from pure white to brownish grey. It makes light, warm knitted garments and shawls.

Mohair:

This fine, lustrous wool from the angora goat of western Asia makes beautiful light rugs and is often combined with other kinds of wool for garments. Its fibres are often 40cm long, and strongly resist felting.

Camel:

The hair of the Bactrian camel is mostly used in its natural fawn colours as it is difficult to bleach. It has 50 per cent more insulating power than any other fibre, and it is sometimes combined with sheep's wool for warm overcoats.

Vicuna:

This is the rarest textile fleece. Each animal gives only 100g of wool and about 40 animals are needed for a single overcoat. The vicuna is impossible to capture, so its herders must live with it in its home territory about 6000m up in the Andes in South America. Vicuna makes beautiful but expensive garments.

Alpaca:

The fleece, varying from white through red, brown and black, is impossible to bleach (though will accept a darker dye), is water repellent and about 300 per cent stronger than sheep's wool. The long alpaca fleece is used in fine quality garments, often with sheep's wool.

Resilience:

The crimp of the fibre and the arrangement of its cells means wool resists crushing and quickly sheds wrinkles and this keeps it a number-one fashion material. The fibre can be stretched up to 30 per cent, yet immediately springs back to its original length when tension is released, and it retains this springiness (synthetic fibres become permanently tired after several washings). Sheepskins make excellent underblankets to help prevent pressure sores in people confined to bed for a long time. The resilience also explains why woollen blankets don't become stiff or matted after long wear.

Christ also said to the Jews that he was not only the Messiah but God. He said "You say, I am" which to Jews "I am" is the great "I am God."

Now did Jesus get crucified for lying? Yes I'm getting heavy about it; the Gospel must not be given licence to be distorted, by a tolerant society that doesn't care if they are going down the tube; the Gospel doesn't have to follow or ever has been dictated by - "who is a nice chappy" or the "their ok" syndrome; false prophets were stoned to death at one stage - why? Because they led people astray.

When knowing the love of Jesus, God, spirit in your life, you would be angry of people being robbed of that experience by inferior things too, this "not being a Christian is a better life" is a joke, my friends.

Jesus' words are true, "For whose findeth me findeth life."

Bruce Davis.

BUSHING, Harold Basil
May 1, 1987

His wife Dulcie, son John, daughter-in-law Maureen and grandchildren wish to express their sincere appreciation and thanks to Dr. Naidoo, nursing staff, domiciliary sister, domestic staff of the St. Marys District Hospital for their thoughtful and special care of Harold while a patient there.

Our personal thanks and acknowledgement to Mr. D. Bailey & Son - Funeral Director, Rev. Ross Flint, Miss Madga Hayes, pall-bearers for their time and support, all who attended the service at the church and graveside, for the beautiful floral tributes, cards, letters, phone calls, gifts of food and all who came to the home after the service, to family, relatives and friends for their assistance and many expressions of sympathy conveyed to us in the recent loss of a dearly loved husband, father, father-in-law and Pa.

Would all please accept this as our personal thanks.

WHY DO WE PRIZE WOOL?

Wool is a natural miracle fibre, with qualities not held by any other fibre, even specially formulated synthetics which have tended to undercut the wool market because of their relative cheapness.

Water Resistance and Warmth

Wool fibres can absorb up to 18 per cent of their own weight in moisture without becoming damp, and half their weight in moisture without becoming saturated. This quality has been known for many centuries. Since water tends to stay on the outer surface it can evaporate without affecting the fabric's insulation qualities.

Wool Labelling

There are several internationally recognised labels which guarantee the quality of woollen articles.

The Woolmark: All products bearing the Woolmark are made of pure new wool, not wool that has been reclaimed or reprocessed. All products bearing the Woolmark comply with Australian Wool Corporation technical standards such as colour fastness to light and water, durability and other qualities appropriate to their use.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

TOO AWAKE

My dear friends, due to the activity of a certain branch of religion in this area, there is a question not properly answered.

Is Jesus God? Does he have God's authority? If not God, why did he die for us? Very difficult to answer properly, even when you know what it means personally.

Jesus is definitely the saviour of the world, and prophetic in the message he brings. Other prophets were not of divine conception. What God is, is not limited by our way of thinking.

God coming to earth in human Form? Yes!

Colossians chapter 1 Verses 9-21 points out a visible form of the invisible. Christ is to call man back to God. He is to show man how to recognise the character of God within man. (Holy Spirit)

Other scriptures on this are, "I and the father are one." I suggest reading the whole bible or sections as it is really, as letters, and not in chapters and verses as most bibles are today. This has come about for easy reference. John chapter 1, verses 1-10 (some translations distort this but as you read on you see) John the Baptist announcing Jesus Christ as being the physical form of God. The name Emmanuel used for Christ means God with us, and without the presence of an argumentative spirit around there is so much to be given and shared in the glory of his name. The bible says so much about salvation to you and me, and does not promote arguing but seeking more truth through discussion.

Being God, Christ has the authority of God, not only yesterday but today. Who judges the living and the dead? "Jesus Christ of Nazareth not Jehovah God." Who sits at the right hand of the father interceding for the saints daily? Jesus. Who made "the provision" of sacrificing his innocence, for our guilt to enable us to fulfil righteousness through grace to inherit God's Kingdom? Jesus.

Jesus was never too proud to be obedient to God although the choice was there. God now had to contend with an earthly form but he had the victory over that, praise God!

Why did he die for us? He must have loved us more than himself. He obtained the victory in doing this over the fallen nature of man that causes us to desire things that go against the very things we were created for. (Cont'd on page 8)
