Avoca Do Not Consume Notice lifted

The residents of Avoca in the Fingal Valley can now enjoy safe, fully treated drinking water after the official removal of the Do Not Consume notice.

Avoca was placed on the health notice following detection of heavy metals in the town's water supply in November 2012. To overcome this problem, TasWater constructed a 29km $3.3m pipeline from the Fingal water treatment plant to the existing Avoca reservoir.

This strategy not only ensures safe water, but has allowed the project to come in $1.4m under the original budget of $4.7m.

Mayor of the Northern Midland and TasWater's Chief Owners' Representative, David Downie, is delighted Avoca residents now have access to safe and reliable drinking water.

unReserved exhibition

Tasmania has a tradition of politically inspired cartoons dating back into the mid 19th century, and those currently on display in the Purple Possum Gallery are worthy inheritors of the tradition.

As the Valley and East Coast Voice has an equally fine tradition of publishing articles, opinion pieces and images from all sides of politics I attended the launch and, with the permission of the conveners / hosts, took a small number of photos.

The exhibition was compiled with the co-operation of The Mercury and the featured artists; John Kudelka, "Polly" Farmer and Colin Downes.

Regardless of your opinion of the subject matter there can be little doubt the cartoons shine a critical light on politics, Tassie style.

Each artist has submitted a number of drawings which examine the political meanderings of post Regional Forest Agreement Tasmania in a way which provides a subtle, or in some cases brutal, comment on the political processes. For anyone who saw them published in the Mercury at the time it is an eye opener to see them enlarged and hanging together.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor

It is sad and shameful to see how greed and selfish, self-serving ambitions destroy and eliminate empathy. If Venus Williams has had any compassion and decency, she could have called-off her Wimbledon participation. Feel sorry for the victims and assist and comfort the family any way she can. How can you play and enjoy - So much for shining STARS, we are blinded by their pure presence.

George Keri, Scamander

Dear Editor

Re: ST MARYS COMMUNITY

I came away from last night's public meeting (20th July) about the proposed skate park at 18 Groom Street, angry and disillusioned. A group of St Marys residents sat in that hall and listened to the person most affected by this plan. The person who lives with her family a few steps away. Some spoke of community, perhaps even community spirit. Not one showed an atom of compassion for her or her fears. They were dismissive and often contemptuous. Not one of them is personally affected by this plan. Not one of them showed that they cared in the least about this member of their community.

I oppose this plan. I spoke against it but I came away from that meeting not angered so much by what was said to me but by the callous indifference to the effect this is having and will have on the family most affected.

The Say, by Cagerattler

The other day I enjoyed a YouTube video I found by chance on Launceston.

It was made in 1966, 51 years ago.

It showed the city as it was half a century ago, and how life was simpler but also busier most likely.

So many viable businesses were evident.

Lonnie had several steel / parts/ mechanical manufacturing outlets, fabric makers, numerous unique retail businesses and lots of cultural and educational opportunities.

One section of this twenty minute video - where not a word was spoken - showed how busy the central part of the city was. Of course this was before the Mall was built in 1975 but the buses all over the place, and lots of cars going back and forth, gave me the impression of the very active small city we all know.

There is no doubt that it's bigger now than in 1966, but as a very young child I can recall the noise of going to 'town' with Mum, Dad and my sisters, and seeing the trolley buses and lots of people (while Mum panicked about one of us wandering off and getting lost).

It's funny, as you get older, how the excitement of going to town changes to somewhat less than excitement.

As one of Australia's oldest cities Port Dalrymple/ Launceston is also one of Australia's best concentration of Georgian and Victorian era buildings, and this lovely little National Film Archives item fondly reminds us of that.

"After extensive testing by TasWater and the Department of Health and Human Services, the water delivered to Avoca residents now meets Australian Drinking Water Guidelines and is safe to drink straight from the tap. "The lifting of the Avoca Do Not Consume notice is an important step towards achieving the commitment to addressing water quality issues in 24 towns across Tasmania by August 2018 and is part of TasWater's 24Glasses campaign."

Construction of the pipeline began in September 2016 and was carried out by Tasmanian company, Water Industry Solutions. It was directionally drilled through the soil to protect sensitive local flora and fauna identified along the route which is mainly contained within the Esk Highway road reserve and at times involved excavating through difficult and rocky terrain.

The existing reservoir in Avoca will provide enough storage to meet peak demand while the pipeline from Fingal is designed in a way that minimises the risk of damage or interruption of the water supply. It underwent a cleaning and maintenance program early this year and with the successful design and construction of the pipeline as well as the cleaning of the reservoir, re-chlorination at Avoca is not required.

"The Fingal-Avoca pipeline project is just one part of TasWater's affordable ten-year, fully funded plan to upgrade Tasmania's water and sewerage infrastructure," said Councillor Downie. "It is a great result for Avoca which will be joined by other small towns across Tasmania as TasWater upgrades drinking water supplies over the next twelve months." Farmers encouraged to re-view WHS protocols during National Farm Safety Week

Agriculture is one of the most dangerous industries in Australia. More than one in five workers who die at work are employed in agriculture. In 2016, there were 63 deaths on Australian farms. Safe Ag Systems chief executive officer Katy Landt says these statistics are simply not good enough and is encouraging all Australian farmers to take another look at the safety of their operations during National Farm Safety Week.

"Farm safety is something we should all be mindful of year-round, but having a dedicated week allows us to educate around some of the major safety issues and encourage some positive practice change," she says. "Making change on your farm does not need to be time-consuming or difficult, and at Safe Ag Systems, we have developed some tools to help you develop a workplace culture of safety."

In 2017, National Farm Safety Week was run from July 17-21. During the week, Safe Ag Systems will be publishing educational articles designed to encourage producers to view activities on their farms from a slightly different perspective.

These will be emailed directly to clients but will also feature on a dedicated section of the Safe Ag Systems website, as well as on its Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn channels, which will host a suite of handy hints and fact sheets in coming months.

"The theme of National Farm Safety Week this year is creating a resilient, safe and healthy ag community, and we see this as a way for us as industry to work with businesses and farmers to build that well-being," Ms Landt says.

"We know farmers are a resilient and resourceful group who are all working hard to make their operations more efficient and safer. We want to publish regular relevant content in an easy-to-digest format to work together with farmers to build safer and healthier communities. Every action you take can help provide a safe work environment. It could be as minor as moving a tree branch off the road, or as major as running a training session for your employees.

Safety on farms is critical but it does not need to be hard or time consuming."

Once a primary producer understands their obligations and penalties involved with a breach they tend to be quite proactive, Ms Landt says.

"The difficulty is knowing where to start," she says. "I give reassurance to producers that it's not as hard as they think.

"Work health and safety has been shrouded in lingo and procedures, but once it is simplified and made applicable to farming practices it's not hard to get a safe system of work up and running.

"Farmers are not alone, we can help."

Saturday July 22 saw the official opening of the exhibition attended by upwards of 40 people who included tourist operators, long standing environmental warriors, and new arrivals to both the state and the region. It was pointed out by Vica Bayley (TWS) that there is a smaller exhibition in the Farm Shed at Bicheno, that there is the possibility of the collection being turned into a book and also that the whole exhibition will ultimately tour the state.

CTST? Despite repeated phone / email requests since the beginning of this year, I remain unable to print a media release defining their current charges, and the pre-requisites for using their service. Clients either are let down at the last moment, or have the unpleasant news that their fare is now $20 more than the local bus service charges or, in some cases, doubled because of a recently introduced time factor. Despite the fact that the charges are displayed on the office door, clients are being asked to pay much more. Some drivers refuse to ask for the extra, many clients (including me) simply refuse to pay the extra. Some, normally quite independent, clients require the assistance of a carer from time to time, and now even this sensible arrangement is being queried. Perhaps the preferred option is that a hospital car and Registered Nurse escort be provided for those who require some support following procedures or examinations, rather than volunteer drivers and kindly neighbours. The local office hasn't been staffed for some time, and the 'coordinator' has no local knowledge of distances, destinations and other pertinent information. I have now resorted to using an alternative regional transport service, which is efficiently run with reasonable charges. Not happy, Jan.

Fingal bike park ready to roll

When several Fingal parents suggested they would like access to more recreational activities to keep their children active, the Fingal Progress Association stepped in. Rene Woods from the Association had seen the amazing Brighton bicycle track and thought something similar in Fingal would be a great addition to the area and the community.

The Association then applied for funding for the project through the Tasmanian Community Fund and received $45,000 which included the restoration of the sandpit area at the Fingal Primary School.

Already children in the area as well as visitors are using the track and it is envisioned that the schools may also use the park for road safety education.

Council would like to congratulate the Fingal Progress Association and the Fingal community on their vision and efforts in bettering their area.

Mountain bike trail network splits Tasmania's St Helens community

By Carla Howarth 23/7/17

A community on Tasmania's east coast is divided over council plans to build a $4.5m mountain bike trail network.

Plans for the 66km Stacked Loop Network south of St Helens, and the Bay of Fires Descent Trail, have some residents worried about the environmental impacts.

The Tasmanian Government has committed $1m to the Stacked Loop Network, which will be stage two of the Derby track — the venue this year for the Enduro World Series.

Landscape ecologist and St Helens resident Christine Hosking said she was worried about the impact on flora and fauna.

"There's a very rare little velvet worm in this environment living right here that doesn't exist anywhere else," she said. "It lives in leaf litter and something else needs to eat that worm and so on up the food chain, until we get to the masked owls that are now a threatened endangered species in Tasmania. Every time you disturb habitat and bush is lost, all those species and that biodiversity gets affected."

Local resident Todd Dudley said he did not believe the mountain bike trails would benefit the whole community.

"Connecting walking and bike tracks between St Helens and Binalong Bay and St Helens Point would be far more beneficial to the local community than these bike tracks," he said.

He said the environment needed to be put ahead of "mass tourism".

Break O'Day Mayor Mick Tucker said council was considering the environmental impacts of the trails.

"We've been doing an awful lot of work with the flora and fauna and, as I said, we've got experts in that field, highly reputable experts and all of that's been done," he said. "The actual building of it will take probably 12 months but we've got to get the final approval process done and as council, we're the same as everyone. We have a very strict guideline that we follow."

Cr Tucker said the economic impacts on the town would be immense.

Simon Holmes says getting disengaged youths onto the bike trails can be transformative. (ABC News: Carla Howarth)

Beris Hansberry, Todd Dudley and Christine Hosking are worried about environmental impacts from bike trails. (ABC: Carla Howarth)

"There's a possibility of around 80 to 150 full time jobs that could be generated by the introduction of the mountain bike tracks," he said. "So to our economy, to our increasing population, increasing our rate base, it ticks all the boxes."

The Break O'Day Council has budgeted $600,000 for the project, while the State Government has committed $1m, and the Federal Government has pledged $1.6m.

Local resident Simon Holmes runs a program with disengaged youth in St Helens, and often takes the young people to trails in Derby and the Blue Tier.

"There's not that much to do for kids in St Helens, and getting kids out into the bush on mountain bikes is just transformative," he said.

"Not only do the kids get out into nature and really learn to appreciate the natural environment but they also get fit and it keeps them occupied."

Mr Holmes said a trail network in St Helens could be life-changing for young local people.

"Not only for their own personal health and well-being but also in terms of careers in adventure guiding, mountain bike maintenance and tour guiding."

Girt: The unauthorised history of Australia BY DAVID HUNT

The inhabitants of this country are the miserablest people in the world.

The Hodmadods of Monomatapa, though a nasty people, yet for wealth are gentlemen to these; who have no houses, and skin garments, sheep, poultry, and fruits of the earth, ostrich eggs, etc., as the Hodmadods have: and, setting aside their human shape, they differ but little from brutes ... They are long-visaged, and of a very displeasing aspect, having not one graceful feature in their faces.

After getting Anglo-Aboriginal relations off to such a promising start, Dampier left our shores, bought a tattooed East-Indian slave named Jeoly, returned to England, sold Jeoly to a travelling freak show and published the diary of his travels.

A New Voyage Round the World was, with the exception of the Bible, the most popular book of its era – part seventeenth-century Lonely Planet guide, part swashbuckling potboiler. Dampier could move seamlessly from a botanical description of the banana to a dissertation on the sexual mores of Filipino women, before launching into tales of rapine upon the high seas and enumerating the many failings of the various foreigners he had met and killed.

Dampier traded off his literary success and came up with a daring new plan.

He would join the Royal Navy and go not discover Australia again!

Hosts needed to be the light for families facing blood cancer

The Leukaemia Foundation is today calling on members of the community to host a Light the Night event in October and light the way for families devastated by blood cancer.

Now in its tenth year, Light the Night is a unique fundraising event that brings Australia's blood cancer community together in more than 140 locations to remember and reflect during a moving ceremony and short lantern walk.

"Hosting your own Light the Night event is a way to proudly show people in your community facing blood cancer, even in their darkest hour, they're not alone," said Ash Knop, Leukaemia Foundation General Manager for VIC & TAS.

"The Leukaemia Foundation runs flagship events in major cities but our wonderful Light the Night hosts give locals an opportunity to be part of this inspiring event.

"And volunteering your time and skills means you'll be helping provide every Australian with the support and services they need to beat their blood cancer."

Last year more than 35,000 people from every state and territory attended a Light the Night event, which can vary in size and location. Some may involve just a few family and friends meeting at a local park, while others are larger events supported by local council and with larger crowds.

"Our community hosts are fully supported by our fundraising team and receive a comprehensive guide on how to hold their event, along with posters, flyers, fundraising tools and dedicated phone support," Ash added.

Learn more about becoming a Light the Night host at lightthenight.org.au/host or call Kelly Cameron on 9949 5884.

JEWISH Orange and almond cake

A classic Passover dessert that draws on the Sephardic traditions of the Mediterranean, Morocco and the Middle East. In this recipe whole oranges are boiled for two hours and then puréed skin, pips and all. Not only is this cake incredibly moreish and moist, it is also gluten and dairy-free making it the perfect all-rounder.

Ingredients

- 2 oranges, washed
- 250g caster sugar, plus extra for dusting
- 6 eggs
- 250g almond meal
- 1tsp baking powder
- icing sugar, to serve

Instructions

Bring a large pot of water to the boil. Wash the oranges and cook in the boiling water for 2 hours. Drain, allow to cool to room temperature, then purée. This step can be done ahead of time.

Preheat the oven to 160°C. Grease and line a 22 cm spring form cake tin with baking paper. Beat the eggs and caster sugar until well combined. Stir in the orange puree followed by the almond meal and baking powder. Pour the batter into the prepared tin and dust the top with extra caster sugar. Bake for 1-1½ hours, until the top is golden and a skewer inserted into the centre comes out clean.

Allow to cool in the tin. Dust with icing sugar, cut into slices and serve.

Australian bricklayer's report

(Possibly the funniest story in a long while)

This is reported to be a true story!

Bricklayer's submission for worker's compensation.

Dear Sir, I am writing in response to your request for additional information in Block 3 of the accident report form. I put "poor planning" as the cause of my accident. You asked for a fuller explanation and I trust the following details will be sufficient.

I am a bricklayer by trade. On the day of the accident, I was working alone on the roof of a new six-story building. When I completed my work, I found that I had some bricks left over which, when weighed later, were found to be slightly in excess of 500lbs.

Rather than carry the bricks down by hand, I decided to lower them in a barrel by using a pulley, which was attached to the side of the building on the sixth floor.

Securing the rope at the ground I went up to the roof, swung the barrel out and loaded the bricks into it. Then I went down and untied the rope, holding it tightly to ensure a slow descent of the bricks. You will note in Block 11 of the accident report form that I weigh 135lbs.

Due to my surprise at being jerked off the ground so suddenly, I lost my presence of mind and forgot to let go of the rope. Needless to say, I proceeded at a rapid rate up the side of the building.

In the vicinity of the third floor, I met the barrel, which was now proceeding downward at an equally impressive speed. This explained the fractured skull, minor abrasions and the broken collar bone, as listed in section 3 of the accident form.

Slowed only slightly, I continued my rapid ascent, not stopping until the fingers of my right hand were two knuckles deep into the pulley.

Fortunately by this time, I had regained my presence of mind and was able to hold tightly to the rope, in spite of beginning to experience pain.

At approximately the same time, however, the barrel of bricks hit the ground and the bottom fell out of the barrel. Now devoid of the weight of the bricks (that barrel weighed approximately 50 lbs) I refer you again to my weight.

As you can imagine, I began a rapid descent, down the side of the building. In the vicinity of the third floor, I met the barrel coming up. This accounts for the two fractured ankles, broken tooth and several lacerations of my legs and lower body.

Here my luck began to change slightly. The encounter with the barrel seemed to slow me enough to lessen my injuries when I fell into the pile of bricks and fortunately only three vertebrae were cracked.

I am sorry to report, however, as I lay there on the pile of bricks, in pain and unable to move, I again lost my composure and presence of mind and let go of the rope and I lay there watching the empty barrel begin its journey back down onto me.

This explains the two broken legs.

I hope this answers your inquiry.

Mt Elephant and Beyond Book Review

Our book for discussion this month was Julian Barnes's 2011 Man Booker Prize winner The Sense of an Ending. It is a short novel, but intense, and demands a careful reading.

It takes the form of a type of confession. Tony Webster, retired and in his 60s, presents us with what seems to be an honest and revealing account of two periods in his life. Writing in the first person and addressing the reader as "you" Tony tells us in the short Part One of the last year of his school days in the 1960s. He is one of a rather exclusive and arrogant foursome of clever, bookish boys who delight in discussing the big questions of life.

Tony falls in love with Veronica Ford, a difficult and snobbish girl, whose family he meets briefly one weekend on a trip to her home.

The two eventually part and next he hears that Adrian, the most intellectual of the clique, is going out with Veronica.

While Tony is overseas on something of a gap year he receives word that Adrian has killed himself. He loses touch with the other friends and tells us briefly of his life over the next 40 years: he has an apparently uneventful career as an Arts Administrator, marries, has a daughter, then a calm divorce and now lives alone. So much for the distant past...

Part Two deals with the present day when actions of his youth come back to haunt him. Out of the blue he receives word that he has been left 500 pounds by Veronica's mother.

There is also a diary-written by Adrian! Why did Mrs Ford have it in her possession and why does Tony have such trouble trying to get his hands on it? It would be a "spoiler" to reveal any more of the plot. It's enough to say that the convolutions and machinations kept us wondering right to the somewhat enigmatic and ambiguous end.

This is not a novel to skim. The language is wonderfully nuanced and there are pages of clever, pithy commentary on life and particularly memory and history because this book is really about the unreliability of both.

"What you end up remembering isn't always the same as what you have witnessed," says Tony.

Barnes creates this character of Tony Webster and wonderfully maintains the voice and behaviour that we may not admire but can find some sympathy for. This is clever writing. The tone is somewhat world weary and we get the feeling that Tony may regret the safe and ordered way he has led his life.

I'll finish with a quote. "We live with such easy assumptions, don't we? For instance that memory equals events plus time. But it's all much odder than this. Who was it said that memory is what we thought we'd forgotten."

Get Active Stay Active

An exciting new project is being offered to the Avoca, Rossarden and Royal George community thanks to the Fingal Valley Neighbourhood House (FVNH) and Grant Todd, an exercise physiologist. They would like to bring individualised exercise classes to the Ash Centre on Wednesday afternoons (at the moment).

The program is for 9 weeks and the cost has been reduced from the usual $70 per session to $20 thanks to funding obtained by the FVNH, if you obtain a GP Management Plan from your GP. A GP Management Plan can be requested if you have a chronic condition such as arthritis, asthma or back pain or similar that has lasted longer than 6 months. It may also be possible on request to have the cost bulk billed through Medicare.

The exercise program is individualised for each person so it is of greatest personal benefit. Notices with details will be displayed at the Avoca Roadhouse and the Avoca Post Office shortly. The program is dependant upon your interest and a commencement date will then be advertised. If you are interested please complete the 'Expression of Interest' slip and give it to Helen Reynolds. Enhance your quality of life.

Why Quilting?

I got the bug more than 50 years ago. I am a traditional quilter, everything is hand done. It takes a year or more to finish one project. I like the finished feel of a handmade quilt.

As a member of Break O'Day Stitchers, I have lots of encouragement for my projects from the other quilters.

I look forward each year to show my work at the Island Quilt show. This year it is very special, because it is being held in Launceston, at the Albert hall on September 1 - 3.

Hope to see you there.

Lana Dee Laessig, Launceston

Tasmanian Quilting Guild Inc will hold their Tasmanian Quilt Expo ('Island Quilts') at the Albert Hall, corner of Tamar and Cimitiere Streets, Launceston, 1- 3 September, 2017

Opening times are Friday 10am - 6pm; Saturday, Sunday 10am - 4pm.

There will be over 250 members' quilts as well as the Bernina 'Best of Australia' 2016 quilts, a Student Quilt Exhibition, novelty quilts and other displays and demonstrations. Raffle tickets will be available for the beautiful butterfly quilt, 'Lepidoptera', designed by Elizabeth Hartman. The raffle quilt was made by members of the Tasmanian Modern Quilt Guild and quilted by Kat Jones. Admission is $8 for adults. Children under 12 free.

Parking is available close by. Free parking is available Saturday after 12 noon and all day Sunday.

Members of the Tasmanian Quilting Guild come from all over the state; there are over 200 members and over 30 Patchwork and Quilting groups. Many members have contributed to the organisation and running of the Expo. Members will also be hostesses over the three days of the exhibition, for visitors who have questions or who want to look more closely at the quilts.

There will also be quilting displays, demonstrations and quilting and sewing stalls. Visitors will also have the opportunity to buy raffle tickets for the raffles quilt, 'Lepidoptera', designed by Elizabeth Hartman, made by the Tasmanian Modern Quilt Guild and quilted by Kat Jones.

More information about Lana Laessig and the Expo

Lana Laessig is a member of the Break O'Day Stitchers, based in St Helens. She is a very talented quilter, as seen by the photos of quilts she has included. As a member of the Tasmanian Quilting Guild, she also enters quilts each year in the Tasmanian Quilt Expo, which is held every second year in Launceston - alternating with Hobart. This year, TQG members have excelled themselves, as we have over 250 quilts to hang in the beautiful Albert Hall - a fitting setting.

Ancient Defences by Jules Jensen July 18, 2017

His sword vibrated painfully when it made contact with the thick-skinned creature that towered over him. It clawed at him with a hand large enough to engulf his whole body if he let it. He dodged to the side as the creature lunged again, huge black eyes as empty and soulless as the abyss of death. It opened its mouth, and a hundred sharp teeth glistened darkly.

He caught it off guard by lunging forward himself, stabbing his sword into one of those huge eyes. The creature screamed and shrank back.

Nearby, where the girl was still chanting activation codes, another demon was nearly upon her.

"Don't stop chanting, and get down!" He shouted at her. She complied instantly, practically falling to the ground, where the red mud stained her ceremonial blue dress. He ran and jumped over her, and as green-skinned demon clawed at him, he slid under its reach and stabbed it in the chest.

The demon fell back, twitching as it died. He quickly looked around, but saw no more monsters clawing their way to the top of the mountain where he was holding his ground.

He hoped that his hair-brained plan was going to work. If it didn't, his town was without their chanter to activate the ancient towers that protected them from the demons.

The red dirt blazed brightly as the sun set. The green-skinned demons would come out in droves as soon as it was fully dark.

"Activate!" The girl finished her chant with a shout.

For a moment, nothing happened. He felt his heart race. Did they fail? Did he read the ancient books wrong? Were they on the wrong mountain? But then the giant tower nearby made a loud bang as its rusty frame creaked to life. The two teenagers jolted and stood closer together as they watched its round head swivel, searching for a target.

It focused on something in the valley below, and it fired a glowing red beam that made surprisingly little sound. The boy didn't even see what it hit, but then it quickly adjusted and fired again. He could hear in the distance the other towers that surrounded the whole area doing their job.

"We did it!" The girl exclaimed, pumping a fist into the air.

"And the adults said it couldn't be done." He said. The way they all talked about it, it sounded impossible to get up to the mountain and turn on the defences for the area. He suspected that they just wanted to scare the kids into staying in the borders.

The towers kept on shooting. He noticed that they stayed pointing near all the towns for a long time, shooting rapidly. That was odd. There usually weren't that many demons that close to the borders. Both of them gasped as they realized one of the towns had lit on fire. Smoke curled into the sky. The old buildings, crafted from the leftover aircraft that brought the ancients to this world a thousand years ago, they were starting to fall.

"Deactivate the towers!" The boy shouted, but she was already hurriedly chanting.

And the demons were starting to climb the mountain again. He fought faster and harder than he ever had in his life to keep his friend safe.

"Deactivate!" She shouted the last word of her chant, and the ancient towers come to a stop.

As the pair raced home, fighting their way past the nocturnal demons, they both vowed to never mess with ancient technology ever again.

It's a sunny afternoon and I'm sitting cross-legged with my eyes closed, introducing myself to my womb

"Hello, womb," I say, inwardly, and wait for a reply. Seven other women are in a circle with me, doing the same as a Spotify playlist of chimey chillout music plays in the background and incense burns.

We are in Chloe Isidora's house, taking up her living room.

Isidora, a former fashion editor turned spiritual practitioner, is leading a "womb wisdom circle". We are all here for different reasons, mine being a mixture of curiosity (my womb and I have not been, shall we say, getting along) and a desire to discover more about what I've come to think of, in the past couple of years, as the "neo-hippy".

When I was growing up, it was desperately uncool to be a hippy. I wouldn't say my parents were hippies exactly, but they were certainly influenced by some hippy ideas. I spent my early childhood living in cooperatives. My mother would purify the house with sage, did yoga, visited reiki healers and read tarot cards (before she stopped, from fear she was allowing in too much "negative energy"). And last time I saw my dad, he was wearing a tie-dye Grateful Dead T-shirt.

Compared with some of my friends' parents, who took part in drumming circles and grew their own weed, they were small fry. One friend grew up in a Buddhist community in Italy and has witnessed the exact moment she crowned via the medium of her parents' birthing video.

Another, a Californian, knew children who had chosen their own names, such as Windsong and Skyraven. I'm friends with people who have been on Ayahuasca retreats. Still, my parents were "bohemian" enough: there were all those times I opened my lunchbox at school and was mortified to find hummus instead of Cheestrings.

These days, my parents would be right on trend. Many aspects of the hippy lifestyle you thought had died a death, save for a hardcore of originals in Somerset and the mountains of north Wales, are back with a vengeance. There's the fashion, obviously: women in floral maxi dresses with tumbling locks topped with flower crowns, men with beards and "man buns".

There's the clean-eating phenomenon: making your own raw chocolate avocado flourless brownies, snacking on nuts and berries, stewing your own overnight oats. Meditation apps are enormously popular, as is 5Rhythms dance (the movement so brilliantly satirised by Peep Show in the form of "rainbow rhythms").

The neo-hippy tendency manifests itself in everything from natural family planning to polyamory, to houses full of terrariums, spider plants and Moroccan rugs.

The resurgence of feminism has intersected with hippydom and seen a renewed interest in womb worship, most notably in the form of the Spirit Weavers Gathering, an all-female Californian camp dubbed "the world's chicest cult".

Meanwhile, many travel bloggers are in on the action: it's all yoga poses at sunset, temples and beautiful women in peasant dresses standing at the edge of canyons, giving the impression of a carefree, nomadic lifestyle that is in fact enjoyed at luxury hotels. That's the thing about the neo-hippy: all these hobbies and interests can appear somewhat divorced from the ethics – it's veganism without reference to an exploitative dairy industry; meditation without the Buddhism; £40 scented candles and a very expensive flight to Goa. An old hippy would probably say that the commodification of the counterculture was complete.

And maybe that's fine. But it is slightly jarring to find that the stuff you always found hideously embarrassing is back in fashion.

My friend Nell, who says last year's Captain Fantastic was basically a Hollywood movie about her dad, and who once wrote an article headlined 27 Signs You Were The Victim Of British Hippy Parents (with which I heavily identify), is equally bemused.

"There's a big disconnect between people having an alternative harmonious image and how they actually live their lives," she says. "Being a real hippy is crap."

Like me, she was embarrassed by her school packed lunch. "Cold, sloppy vegetable curry. And then a loose handful of raisins. Oh God. I remember the day when I unwrapped my sandwich and thought, 'I might as well die.'"

The Spirit Weavers' Instagram account is full of filtered snapshots of women standing naked in circles, their hands raised towards the sky.

But that was the point, she argues. "Everything you had was a bit shit: my clothes from jumble sales; the fact that we cleaned our loo with Ecover or vinegar meant that it didn't smell like a fresh swimming pool; and the fact that we had to brush our teeth with toothpaste powder."

As she says this, I get a flashback to the fennel toothpaste and crystal deodorants my mother used to buy.

"It was not very nice," Nell says. "But there was an understanding that you had to sacrifice a certain level of luxury for a higher ideal."

It's an aesthetic that's defined by what you're wearing, the decor of your flat, the food you're cooking. Now there is an unwillingness to make sacrifices in pursuit of those ideals. Meditation apps are a prime example of the modern way.

That whitewashing of Buddhism takes out all the stuff about having to look after each other," Nell points out. "It's about you, and looking after yourself."

Sarah and Lucy (not their real names) are twins who spent seven years of their childhood in a Tibetan Buddhist centre. "It was the real deal," Sarah says. "It was run by a Tibetan tulku and populated by a serious, studious group of mostly Europeans, actively engaged in academic and religious study. We were not quite self-sufficient, but grew most of what we ate. Every adult was allocated a job, from gardener to candle-maker, and everything we did was clearly rooted in a belief system, so our childhood felt structured and calm in many ways. We were both busy and free, dipping in and out of all the workshops: cheese-making, carpet-weaving, woodwork."

Sarah was conscious from a young age that they were different from other children.

"We went to the local primary school, which had a few of us 'hippy' kids alongside the local children who lived in actual houses furnished, I imagined, with carpet. Meanwhile, we lived in caravans, or in rooms within shared houses."

Naturally, they were vegetarian.

"I appreciate that the world has since caught up, but at the time all I wanted was a Fray Bentos pie from a tin. But despite the desperate childish desire to fit in, I knew it was amazing and beautiful, even while we were living it."

Lucy didn't feel the same desire to fit in. It wasn't until after they had left the community that she realised they had been viewed as different.

"Integrating into a more mainstream social structure felt like a baptism of fire, and somewhat heartbreaking, too," she says. "Fellow citizens prioritising loving kindness and compassion, no matter how clumsy or messy, could no longer be taken for granted. That's what I remember most vividly."

The BETOOTA ADVOCATE

Hipsters Now Using Chocolate Cake As Low-Sugar Alternative To Brioche Burger Buns CLANCY OVERELL | Editor

One of Betoota's most prominent hipster cafes in the town's French Quarter has today revealed the rising trend of replacing the once-cool Brioche style burger buns with cake or croissants.

The low-sugar alternative has been a hit with 'foodie' youth who will essentially eat anything they are told to eat by online pop culture publishers. Local hipster chef, Aquila Diamonte (38) says the moment people started eating brioche with red meat, he knew he could get away with anything.

"It's basically a meringue when you take into account all of the sugar and egg white. I don't know how the f--k we convinced people to eat it."

Aquila says now that supposedly health conscious Australians are in the habit of eating French pastries with their burgers, the move towards chocolate and carrot cake was a no brainer.

"Why not? The icing is the only difference – and that's still not as sugar-heavy as your run of the mill 'hot sauce' – I don't think anyone cares about the difference between dessert and dinner anymore."

Other new food trends that we didn't think needed to be warranted with a place on a menu is the new "smashed egg" – which is essentially boiled egg on sourdough, but with pepper.

"The word 'Smashed' is a keeper" he said. "It's the new 'poached' – we can throw $10 on the price tag of anything that is smashed."

UNIVERSITY OF THE THIRD AGE

Wanted: People interested in forming a Fingal Valley U3A

What is U3A?

Universities of the third age, or U3A's, are voluntary, not for profit organisations that offer people who are interested in learning educational opportunities that are fun and free, in a relaxed social setting. There are no entry requirements to U3A, and no qualifications or awards are given.

Members teach and learn for the sheer joy of it. The word 'university' in the title is used in the medieval sense of a community of scholars coming together to learn from each other. Every older person has a lifetime of talents, knowledge and skills to share with others.

Where did U3A come from?

The movement started in France in 1968, as a response to a government initiative to provide education to the retired. The first course was on Gerontology, in Toulouse.

The movement spread to other European countries, and to Quebec and California. The first Australian U3A was in Melbourne in 1984. Now, across Australia, there are 240 U3As and the movement is still growing.

What do U3As offer?

Most U3As offer a program of weekly classes, during school terms; holidays are avoided, due to members having grandparent responsibilities.

A wide range of subjects are offered, depending on availability of group leaders.

Some suggestions are:

- ◆ Armchair Theatre - play reading
- ◆ Armchair Travel
- ◆ Brain Games
- ◆ Computer Skills
- ◆ Creative Writing
- ◆ History and Literature
- ◆ Music Appreciation
- ◆ Public Speaking

Skills such as cooking, crochet, jewellery making etc. can also be part of the U3A group. Social activities can also be part of U3A - bushwalking, travel groups, coffee mornings, dining out groups can all be organised under the U3A umbrella.

The Fingal Valley Neighbourhood House has kindly offered space for no charge, to hold activities for a new U3A group.

At this point we need names of people interested in both learning and teaching classes.

Please phone either Ruth Miller on 0448 408 492 or Rosemary Harper on 0467 186 593 to register interest. We will proceed with a meeting when sufficient interest has been indicated.

Pepper is a wolfhound x dalmation, born 29/1/17, currently participating in beginners classes after having completed puppy school. Good with cats, dogs, children and livestock but needs close monitoring around chickens. Will require good fencing as he likes to climb and jump.
